Northern Living Allowance

The Northern Living Allowance is an incentive by the Canadian Government to financially support those living in northern communities that are in remote areas and sometimes face high costs of living. A bi-weekly allowance is available for those permanently living in these northern communities across Canada for a period of more than 6 months. If you lived in a prescribed northern zone, you can claim full deductions and if you lived in a prescribed intermediate zone, you can claim one-half of the deductions. The daily allowance for the full deduction is currently $8.25 per day and $4.125 per day for those in the intermediate zone. You can also claim the additional amount, in both zones, if you have maintained and lived in a dwelling in the prescribed zone during that time and you are the only person claiming the basic residency amount for living in that same dwelling for that period. There also may be travel benefits available for employees whose employers provide a travel allowance to designated Canadian cities.
